

Summer Hazards

In assembly this week, we discussed keeping safe over the summer holidays, and I asked the children to identify the hazards in 6 different places. These were: water, railway lines, construction sites, roads, derelict buildings and online.

The children were very aware of the road safety rules, and could give many sensible ideas of the hazards in the different environments.

We also discussed 'peer pressure' and resisting it when the children know that they could be putting themselves at risk of harm.

I suggested to the children that the one environment I would predict the children do take risks with is online safety. Whether that is going on social media underage, trusting AI bots, accessing inappropriate content, cyber bullying, identity theft etc.

I really hope the children return in September fit and healthy, and have fun this summer without putting themselves at risk.

Teacher Unions Support Improved Government Pay Offer

Good news! The government have improved their pay offer for teachers from their original 3.5%, to the 4.5% earlier in the year, and now to 6.5%. They have also pledged to fund 3% of the 6.5% in additional money to schools.

A 6.5% increase was the amount recommended by the independent pay review body, and it has thankfully been accepted by the government.

We are all so pleased that the government have finally shifted their position, that the dispute is over, that staff won't be losing pay and the children's education will not face the levels of disruption experienced this school year.

Become a Parent
Governor!

Parent Governor Election

Everyone should have received a text message this week with a link to an online ballot to choose between the three candidates who have put themselves forward for the two Parent Governor vacancies on the Governing Body.

I would encourage every parent/carer to vote before next Thursday.

I am sure there were many, many pats on the back and treats given out to the children this week for the wonderful reports that have gone out...

and quite right too. We intentionally have high expectations of the children, so they do deserve great credit and praise for the continued positive attitudes and great effort they put in. Well done children.

We have our last full week of the year next week, and with three trips and special leavers events starting in the coming days, there is no slackening of the pace. Thank you to everyone again for all the efforts going in to these events.

It was great to see the children excited about Transition Day on Wednesday, and to see so much positivity about next year already. I enjoyed seeing some of the new Early Years children yesterday ready to start their All Saints Journey, while Year 6 are coming towards the end of theirs.

I hope everyone has a lovely weekend, and thank you for your continued support.

Rights Respecting School

Article 8 - Is about a child or young person's name, nationality and family relationships. It says that the government shouldn't interfere with a child or young person's right to any of these.

It also says the government should be able to help if any of these things are taken from them illegally. As well as this, this Article says official records should be kept of who a child or young person is to make sure information about their name, nationality or birth parents isn't lost.
